On Professionalism

From The President

The publication of the OPC Membership Directory constitutes yet another reminder of the Club's professional purposes and provides a good opportunity, therefore, to devote some of these introductory remarks to the subject of professionalism.

First, however, some vital statistics. As of this writing, the Overseas Press Club of America has 1,547 members. In addition to the New York Area, in which most members reside, there are eight chapters — Washington, D. C., Los Angeles, Chicago, Philadelphia, Florida, London, Hong Kong and Buenos Aires. Our members are scattered in small groups and singly throughout the world.

Of the total membership, 649 are Active Members — reporters, writers, photographers and editors of American-owned information media. They are with established news agencies, newspapers, press syndicates, broadcasting or television network or stations, and those magazines which maintain regularly and systematically independent news and/or features coverage of international affairs. Associate Members are in related professions.

The Club maintains lounge, bar, and dining facilities at the Hotel Biltmore in New York City. It publishes regularly the OPC Bulletin with news of members' activities and related matters of interest in journalism. It sponsors the Annual OPC Awards, next to the Pulitzer Prizes, the most prestigious in American journalism.

Its annual Awards Dinner, featuring prominent speakers, is a major public affairs event. Its annual publication, Dateline, is known widely for its excellence as a substantive magazine. Its regularly sponsored events at the Club are designed to enhance the profession of journalism and allied professions.

As for the term, professional, American journalists have always found it difficult to apply to themselves. The Alsop brothers titled one of their books "The Reporter's Trade" to make the point that it was not a profession. At the recent dedication of the American Press Institute building in Reston, Va., Eugene Peterson spoke eloquently of "our profession" and in the next breath recalled, "The year I came into the newspaper business. . ." (remember the phrase, "newspaper game"?)

Ironically, while news professionals have trouble with the applicability of the term, press critics such as Irving Kristol complain that American journalism "is rapidly becoming an underdeveloped profession." Kristol deplored journalism's "amateurism" and proposed newsmen become better educated, like professors.

That brings us to an old conundrum. Are we better off with talented newsmen who acquire working knowledge of specialized information or with knowledgeable specialists who acquire working knowledge of journalism's techniques?

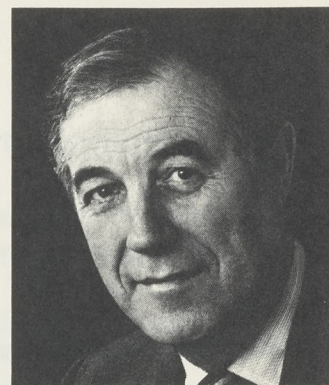

I suspect that if we "professionalized" journalists with specialized education, we would actually eliminate any claim that journalism might have to being a profession. The learned professionals would use journalism as a technique, but journalists themselves would shrink in number.

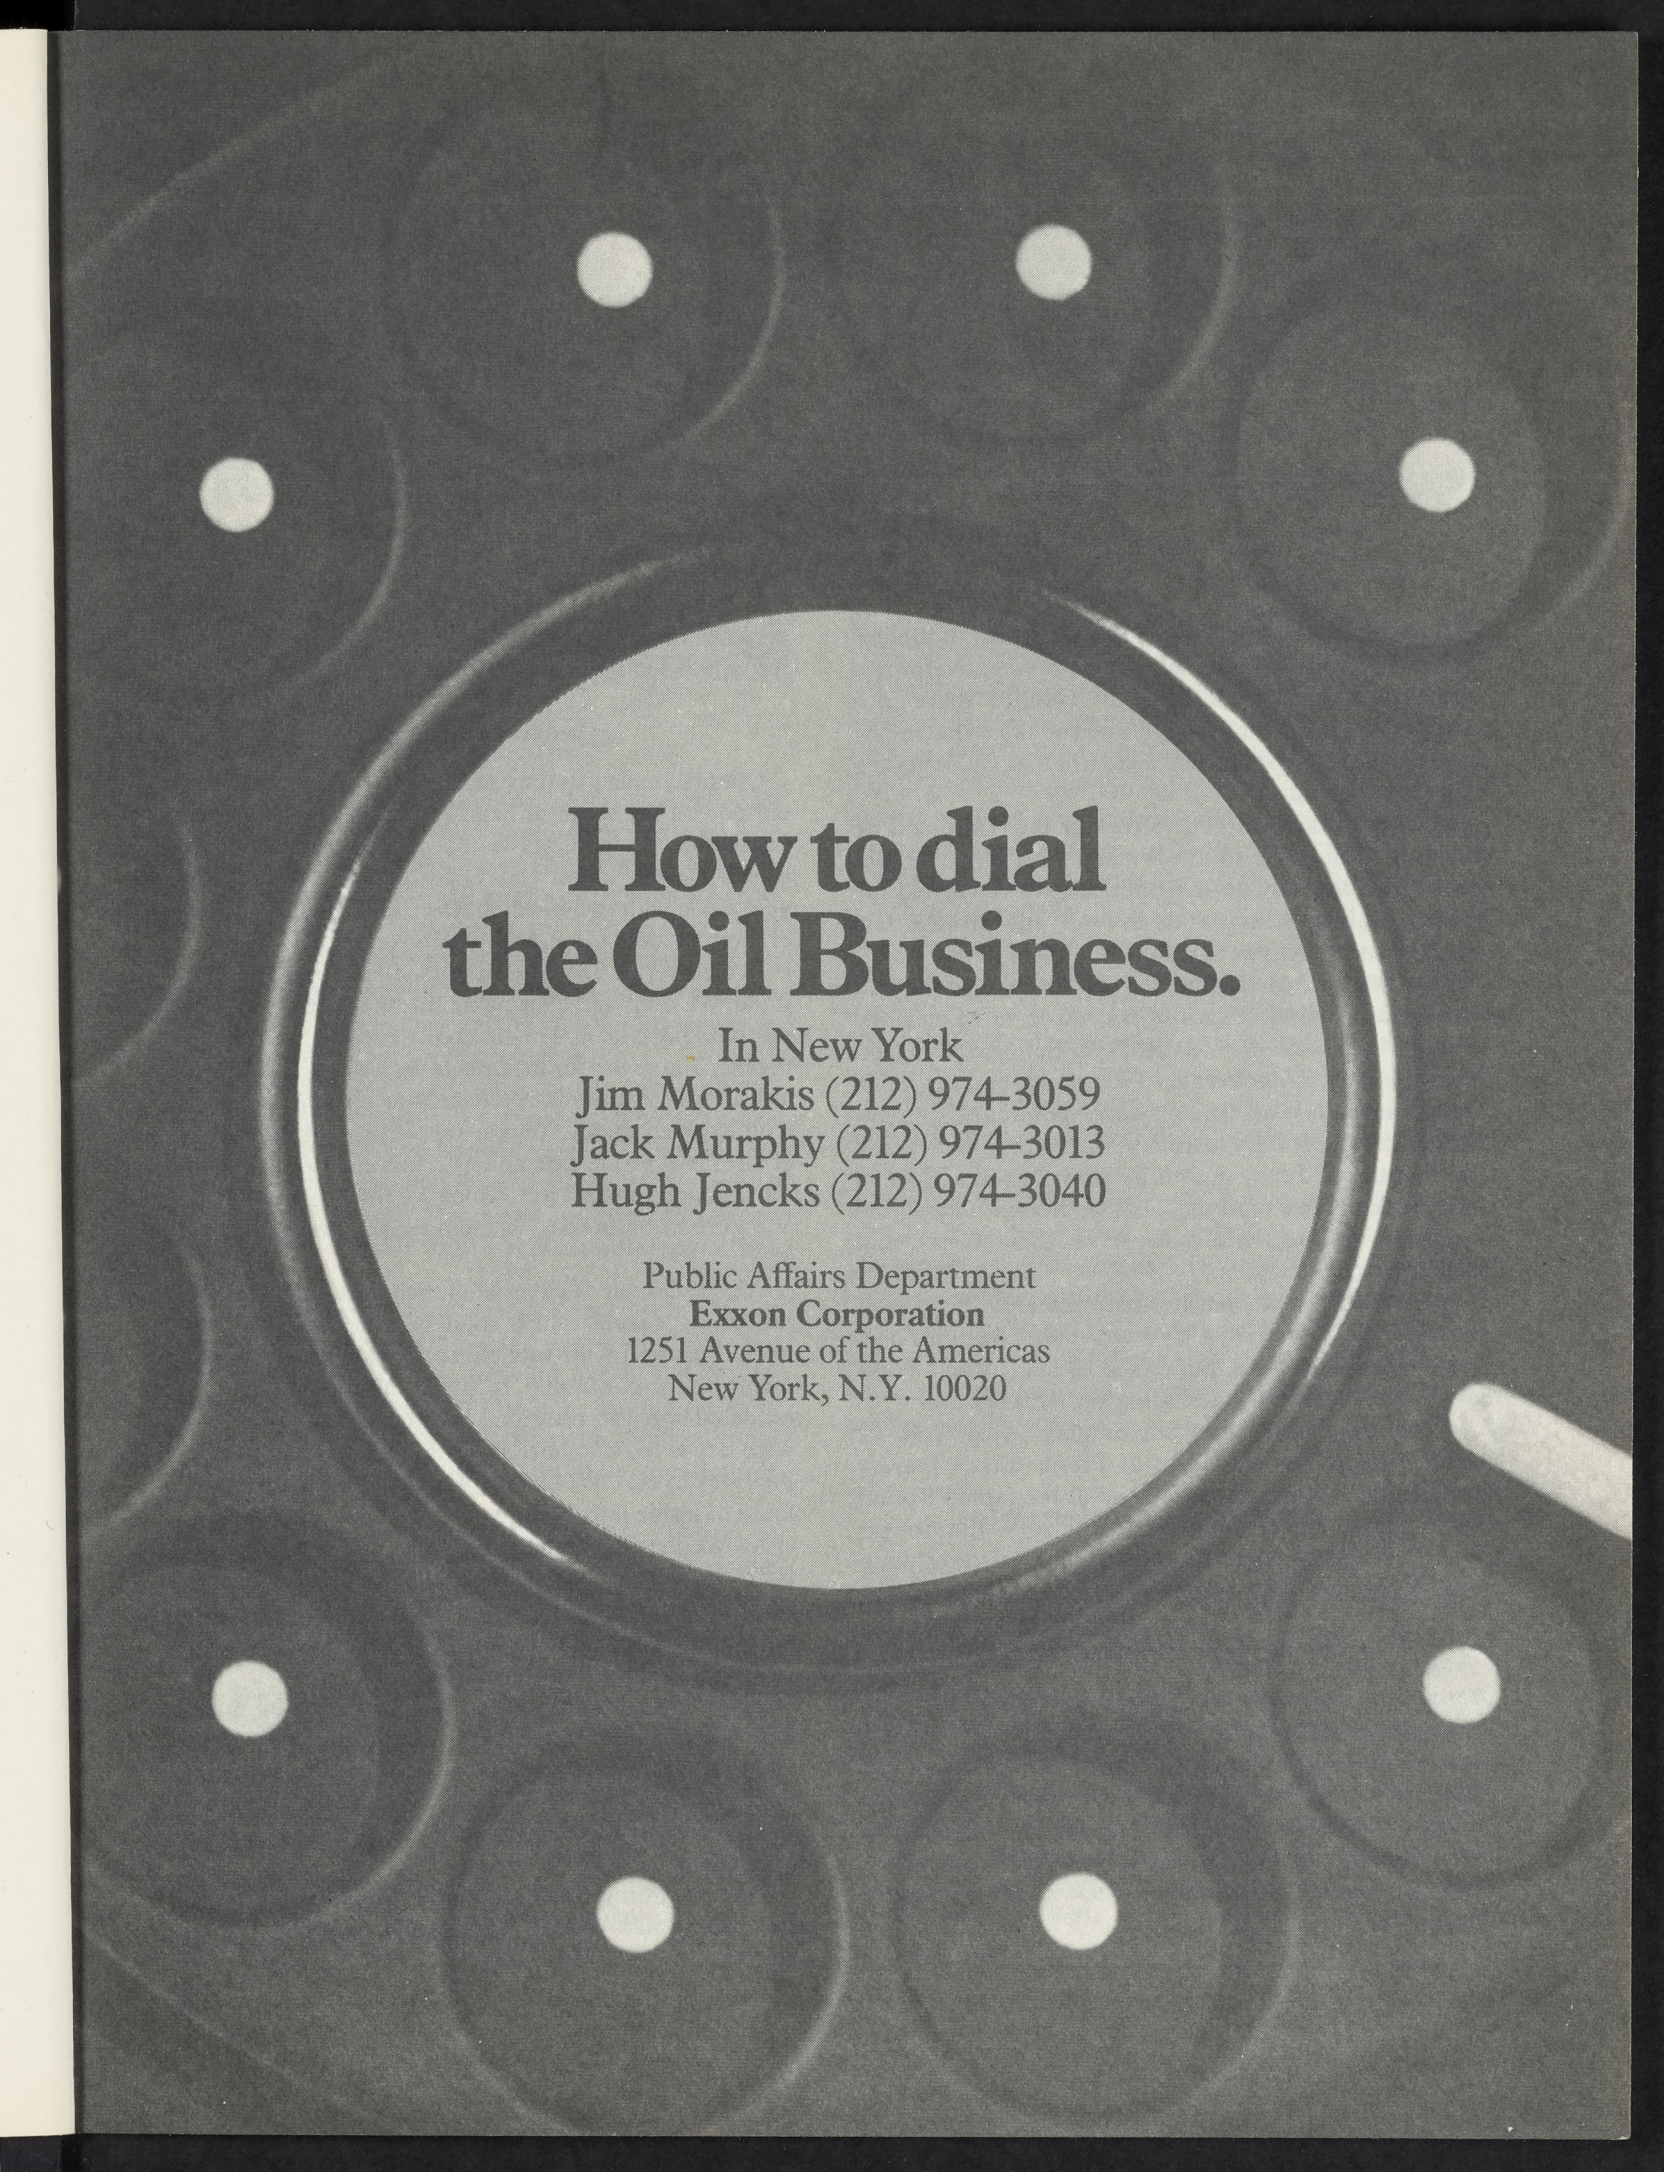

Yet the press in America was never expected by the Founding Fathers to be one of the "learned professions," such as medicine, theology and the law, inevitably constricted by standards, regulations and even license from higher authority. The press was encouraged by the Fathers of the Constitution to challenge authority, to be undisciplined and even somewhat irresponsible.

Thus, the professionalism of newsmen is based to a large degree on its anti-professionalism, on standards of excellence and honesty rather than formally established codes and patterns of practice which too often are reduced to bureaucratic "respect for higher authority."

And that is, of course, why the OPC, ruffled and undisciplined in behavior as its members may be, nevertheless continues year after year to serve not a profession so much as a basic, social ideal — "freedom of the press," freedom, even, to be un-professional.

OPC Makes Its Own History

Affairs of men come around to the problem of money. General Motors, Pan Am, the United States government and the Overseas Press Club of America share in a common quandary in trying to find money to meet ever rising costs. It's like climbing a tall hill that keeps getting taller. It's difficult.

Moving from West 40th Street to the Time & Life Building, from there to the Women's National Republican Club, and now to the Biltmore, we've carried the money problem along with us—but our professional interests and programs as well.

It is not recorded that any of the founders had economics in mind when they sat down to dinner one evening in March 1939, at Rocky's Bar and Grill, on Ninth Street at Sixth Avenue. Talk got around to a press club. The diners, all foreign correspondents, remembered the camaraderie of Harry McElhone's New York Bar in Paris, and they missed it. They missed a place in New York where a reporter could sit down with assorted newsroom retainers and buffs, have a few drinks, and talk. Some one to talk to.

It is recorded that Charlie Ferlin fathered the idea of the OPC, like Zeus giving birth to Athena from his own head. Wythe Williams, Samuel Dashiell, Linton Wells and Hal Lehrman were attending pediatricians.

A few days later, on Palm Sunday, April 2nd, 42 certified neophytes sat down at Frank Case's literary hostelry, the Algonquin Hotel, and at the famed Round Table signed on as charter members. Williams was elected President, and Sam Dashiell Vice President. Irene Kuhn and Eugene Lyons were named as a committee to draw up a constitution. They promptly did and recommended the name, Overseas Press Club.

Quarters Are Formed

Our first home was the Gladstone Hotel, a comfortable old pile on the south of 52nd Street, between Park and Lexington. A people-type place. They served a marvelous martini there. The Gladstone has disappeared, alas, along with its 50-cent martini, making room for one of those modern up-ended glass boxes.

Bob Davis of The Sun knew somebody at the Gladstone. We don't have his name but the OPC owes him a posthumous salaam. He donated a cubicle, rent free, off the mezzanine for our first headquarters — a windowless, airless little sitting room adjacent to an office complete with battered desk, a rented typewriter, a brown paper accordion-type file case and a telephone. We had run of the dining room and bar, which we put to generous use. We were in business, and membership quickly grew to 300.

We started our Wednesday luncheons here, featuring headline speakers, which soon became the talk of the town. Eugene Lyons was elected President (1940), and membership continued to grow. Trouble in Europe escalated into war; returning reporters and exiled leaders were deposited on shore by ship and plane and found their way to the OPC luncheon table. The Club became a fount of inside information.

As Wednesday luncheons grew in popularity they taxed the capacity of the Gladstone dining room, and we decided to move to larger quarters in the Belmont-Plaza on Lexington Avenue, across from the Waldorf-Astoria where we held our first annual dinner.

Office space remained a mere cubicle off the mezzanine (happily, rent free again), but the dining room was ample to accommodate the crowds that began turning up, as many as 400 on days when we had an especially newsy speaker. Membership grew, and Burnet Hershey was elected President.

This was during the hectic days of early 1941, before the Hitler-Stalin breach. The German-American Bund, the Fritz Kuhn thing, was active, and the country was divided, four corners against the middle. The Club shared in the confusion (several members were expelled) until Pearl Harbor restored unity.

Exciting Stories Told

Veteran Club members, along with local reporters who had never been further from shore than the Ambrose Light, took off to find and cover the fighting. Back on leave, their tales of how they got there (across Africa to Lake Chad, for instance, and up the Nile to Cairo and across the Western Desert to reach the Bengazi front) made a more exciting story than the censored accounts in newspapers and magazines and over radio, the dramatic new channel of instant communication.

"London calling—," a fading, faint voice and the impression of civilization sinking with the Allied cause in the Pacific, Asia, Africa and Europe. Possibly we acquired a permanent bad habit, trying to read into postwar news a sense of drama and suspense that began in World War II with faulty radio transmission and reception.

The war created an unprecedented interest in foreign news, and soon we were crowded again for room. We moved to the Lotus Club, then on West 57th Street, Lowell Thomas as our fourth President leading the way. We remained there, in consideration of a small monthly rental and our bar and luncheon business, for the next five years.

Constructively, the Club expanded its interest in foreign affairs, exerting a direct influence to effect the release of journalists jailed by politicians, even in enemy areas. After the war, when the Prague Communist government jailed AP reporter William Otis, the Club was quick to recommend action by the U.S. State Department, and never let up until Otis was finally released.

When police closed Rome Daily American OPC went direct to the Italian government with an effective protest. We protested the closing of El Comercio, the Quito newspapers, and the prolonged jailing of Michael Torino, the Argentine editor. We began a sustained campaign for press freedom in Moscow, Peking, Budapest, Manila, Singapore, Saigon, Haiti and other world and Latin American capitals.

The Lotus Club remained our comfortable, prestigious home under three succeeding Presidents — Lucian S. Kirtland (1943), Wythe Williams (1944, a second term), and W. W. (Bill) Chaplin, he of the hairline figure and stentorian voice who served as seventh and eight President, and later (1948) as our tenth.

When the Lotus Club lost its building, we had to move — March 15, 1947. We had acquired a taste for luxury — easy chairs, private bar, stacks of newspapers and magazines — and our next home was a considerable comedown in the old Times Tower rookery in Times Square. We made ourselves comfortable as possible, however, in an odd-shaped triangle, complete with a portable bar (unlicensed) and a press room atmosphere reflected by mastheads and photographs of our own VIPs pasted on the walls.

While at the Lotus Club we had created a new unit — the Correspondents Fund, its mission to provide emergency assistance to members in need because of age, illness or sudden misfortune. It was incorporated under the laws of the State of New York while Wythe Williams was serving his second term. H. V. Kaltenborn was the first Fund President, and ten Club members were named as Founding Directors.

Attracted Impressive Speakers

Bob Considine became our new President at the Times Tower command post (CP), and under his dynamic leadership we greatly expanded our activities. We made a couple of movies, started the Regional Dinners, and launched the OPC weekly Bulletin.

Luncheons were held at Town Hall, but the annual dinners remained at the Waldorf. We enlivened these proceedings by presenting awards for outstanding coverage of foreign news. We attracted an impressive list of speakers — Herbert Hoover, Harry S. Truman, General of the Army George C. Marshall, James F. Byrnes, then Secretary of State, and a cadre of former kings, exiled generals and political leaders.

Membership grew to more than 500, of whom about 300 were accredited war correspondents. About 100 were with state-side government agencies: Office of War Information, Office of Strategic Services and Office of Censorship. Some of our new members were reporters who had worked on Yank, the Army Weekly, Stars and Stripes and in armed forces public relations.

Large Home Needed

Location of the United Nations in New York brought a flux of reporters to cover proceedings, and most, sooner or later, gravitated toward the OPC. We began rubbing our elbows raw in confines of our "poor man's press club." Members began talking about a bigger home.

Real estate was the thing; everybody seemed to be in it, had made money from it, or was about to make a fortune. A home, a building of our own, seemed entirely in harmony with the times.

Frank Kelley was our 11th President (1949), followed by Louis P. Lochner and John Daly (1951). William P. Grey, who succeeded Daly, saw the launching of a drive for funds to acquire a press club. The drive raised $100,000 and a site committee went to work and found a suitable building on 39th Street, town house just west of Park Avenue. We raised a final $90,000 from a Club-sponsored half-hour TV film, Deadline I and bought the building.

Alas! Tempus fugit indeed, for all of us who remember that truly charming structure. We had it renovated and decorated, adding brightness and comfort to a warm and friendly building. We were there five happy years.

Around the corner was the Princeton Club, in a building that stood as a monument to the Age of the Brownstone. It deserved preservation but was destined to go because the Age of the Bulldozer was upon us.

While we were at 35 East 39th Street we danced to a lively quadrille. In late 1955 we held a two-day seminar on News, Knowledge, and Freedom of the Americas. Among a host of important people in attendance were The Presidents of Ecuador and Colombia.

We also stepped up our support of press freedom, demanding the right of a reporter to travel and obtain

News watchers like the two-man anchorman team. Howard K. Smith reports from Washington, the political nerve center of the nation. Harry Reasoner reports from New York, news headquarters of the world. They give viewers the kind of incisive news reporting that goes to the heart of each story...to make clearer what's going on. And they head up the only evening news program that offers the stimulating contrast of two anchormen. One of the many reasons why the ABC Evening News with Howard K. public information anywhere in the world. If this was indeed a shrinking world, "one world" as proclaimed by politicians, news in any part of it had to have meaning in all parts of it.

Wednesday luncheons in the second-floor dining room of our five-story building were regularly attended by UN delegates, ambassadors and visiting heads of state. The answers they gave to questions put to them by Club members made front page news here and abroad. Regional dinners, devoted to the arts, history and cuisine of foreign countries, kept members in tune with people and mores of foreign lands.

Again, our activities attracted more people than we could accommodate. Talk began to be heard about expansion. Wayne Richardson, a veteran AP staffer, was serving as our 18th President (1956) when a plan was advanced to acquire a smaller town house next door, at 33 East 39th Street, knock out the walls and combine the two buildings. The project was explored, but problems developed: too many architectural hazards and possible violations of city building codes. Finally, it would cost too much money.

John Wilhelm, a McGraw-Hill editor and former newsman, was serving as our 21st President (1959) when the idea of a new and larger press center became an issue. A fund drive was organized and kicked off, bolstered by brochures and public relations thaumaturgy. Members exerted their energies over an eight-month period, and we came up with $273,000. Ben Wright headed the successful drive.

About the same time, a real estate developer came along with cash and an offer to buy our building and the Princeton Club next door, fronting on Park Avenue. John Luter, then a Newsweek editor serving as our 22nd President, supervised the sale of our property for $675,000, at a handsome profit. We promptly bought the National Republican Club building for $600,000. Centrally located at 54 West 40th Street, across from Bryant Park and a half block from the New York Public Library, it looked like the answer to all our needs.

It should be noted here that our real estate was held in the name of the Correspondents Fund, dating to an agreement signed in 1952, during our first drive to raise money for a press center, in order to take advantage of tax law privileges. The Fund could claim tax-exempt status; the Club could not. It was agreed that the Fund would own any building we decided to buy, and would rent it to the Club. This would enable the Fund to put more money into its charitable works.

This arrangement worked well during the presidencies of the following: Richard J. H. Johnston, Will Yolen, Barrett McGurn, Merrill Mueller, Victor Riesel, and Hal Lehrman—all of whom contributed importantly to the progress of the Club.

In 1969 this agreement came in for heated debate during a financial crisis when the Club was unable to keep up rent to the Fund. A family squabble resulted and severely divided the membership until a sensible solution was reached. The Club moved out.

We found accommodations for a few months — bar privileges — at the National Democratic Club, then moved to the Time & Life Building, into cushy, bright quarters on the second floor. Will Oursler, declining in March 1972 to run for reelection as President, cited the move as a major step toward reviving the Club. His successor, Jack Raymond, a former New York Times correspondent, discovered, however, that our financial troubles had tracked us all the way over from West 40th Street.

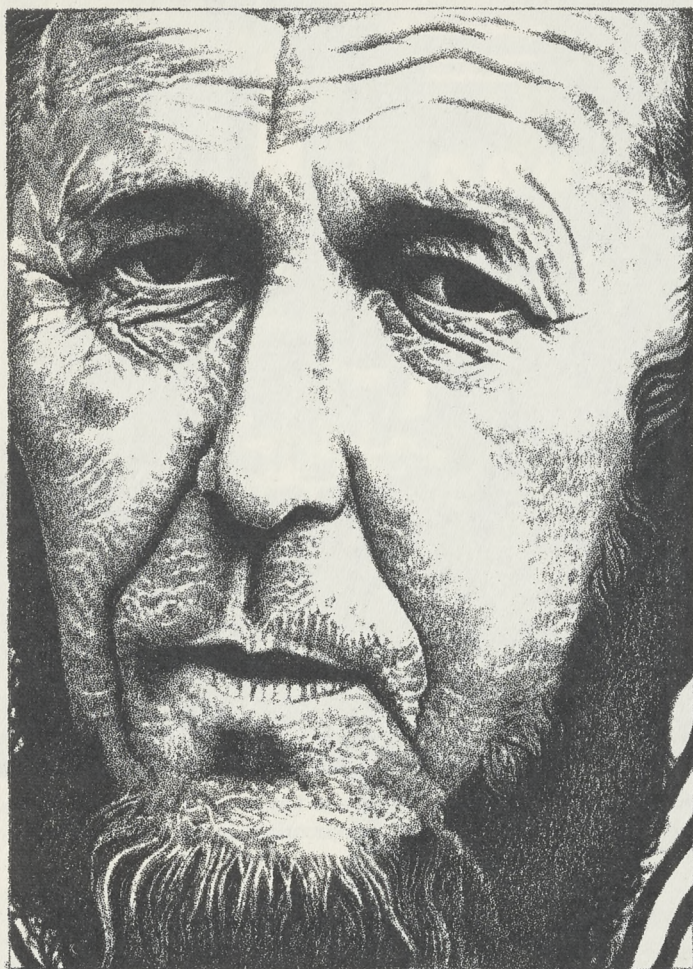

The Time & Life CP was too rich for our blood. Our next move, in May 1973, was about 200 yards down the street, to the Women's National Republican Club, at 3 West 51st Street. We were there from May 16 until January 25, 1974, when we moved to temporary quarters in the Petit Lounge, on the second floor of the Biltmore Hotel. We were there a few weeks, until our present Club rooms on the 19th floor became available.

Economical Arrangement Made

Jack Raymond, reelected President, announced the terms of a 10-year agreement with the Biltmore for about 5,000 square feet of space in which the Biltmore assumed all catering and billing services. After the first year, the OPC was to share a percentage of any profit generated by its membership.

The Club now was out of the catering business and would be supported on membership dues. But our problem was to increase the membership, down now to 1,500 members. Accordingly, in late 1973, the board voted to cut annual dues to $75 for new working press members, and no initiation fee. Regular sustaining membership was to remain at $175. Eligibility rules were amended to accommodate the Space Age.

When last observed the club was in comfortable quarters. Its professional events were again attracting attention. Its professional purposes were energetically being reaffirmed. And it was now, to paraphrase Will Yolen, rocketing along.

Exclusive Survey of Foreign Correspondents

A Vanishing Species: The American

by RALPH E. KLIESCH

Dr. Kliesch is associate professor of journalism at Ohio University, Athens, Ohio. A specialist in international communication, he has been studying the foreign press corps for a decade. The School of Journalism is the major component of Ohio University's College of Communication, and its dean, John R. Wilhelm, is a former president of the O.P.C.

The dwindling presence of the American correspondent abroad, first noted in 1969 and confirmed as acute in 1972, is now fully in a state of recession.¹ At a time when world conditions and events—sharply expanding populations vying for inadequate food and energy supplies in a context of global stagflation and growing nuclear prowess—demand the best in international newsgathering, the intelligence network serving American readers is declining both in overall size and in terms of its elite component—the professional American foreign correspondent.

The sixth world census of journalists representing American media overseas, just completed, brings to the 1975 Overseas Press Club Directory the following country-by-country list of 429 full-time American correspondents and their 247 foreign-national colleagues gathering news abroad for their American employers. The census becomes distressing when its data are compared to parallel findings of the prior tri-yearly surveys.

The 429 full-time American staffers in 1975 compare to 524 in 1972 and 563 in 1969. Today's figure thus represents a 17% drop from the 1972 survey and a 23% decline from the 1969 study, which then already noted a drop in Americans from 1966 figures, although it found the total foreign staff complement at an all-time post World War II high.

The addition of the 247 listed foreign-national full-timers brings the total 1975 staff count to 676, which compares even less favorably with statistics generated by the two previous surveys. Today's figure is 16% below the 797 correspondents counted in 1972 and is 28% below the 1969 total of 929.

The overall drop will come as no surprise to news service heads and foreign-desk chiefs. In fact, many such survey respondents reported a decline in their own staffing levels when they provided data. Some noted that they staff foreign assignments out of their domestic bases, a time-honored practice that has long supplemented use of news bureaus abroad. Others noted switching from use of correspondents to stringers, who have always been an important element of the foreign press corps. But few, if any, foreign editors would prefer a stringer, all else being equal.

Methodologically, this census departs from its predecessors. In the past, basic data were obtained in the form of correspondent lists from U. S. Embassies and Press Clubs abroad. These lists were then sent to senior correspondents in their respective countries for local verification. However, the lists nevertheless were found on occasion to lack names and, at other times, to include names of non-journalists or of newsmen no longer working in that country.

Hence, it was decided this time to turn to media headquarters for names and locations of their personnel. Most major media were contacted in person. Virtually all others, including many minor organizations whose names surfaced as a result of the 1972 survey or perusals of Editor & Publisher Yearbook and other media lists, were queried by telephone or letter (with telephone followup). Although many of the smaller organizations reported only stringer use or no foreign-gathered content at all, there were virtually no non-respondents.²

All correspondents were identified by name and address, and by sex and nationality. In two or three instances minor organizations requested their people not be listed by name and address, and in one or two other instances the organization indicated a preference for listing the name without street address. The vast majority of personnel on the following pages are listed fully by name, address, and employing organization.

¹Ralph E. Kliesch, "The Press Corps Abroad Revisited: A Fourth World Survey of Foreign Correspondents." Paper read at the International Division Session of the Association for Education in Journalism Convention in Berkeley, California, August 1969; and John R. Wilhelm, "The World Press Corps Dwindles: A Fifth World Survey of Foreign Correspondents." Paper read at the International Division Session of the A.E.J. Convention in Carbondale, Ill., August 22, 1972.

²It should be noted that the current data include only 30 foreign-nationals working full time for the Associated Press, well, down from the 74 and 109 such persons found abroad for AP in the '72 and '69 studies. Given the time constraints of the survey, AP supplied data only for its 62 American staffers and "as many foreign-nationals as we can." However, given an incomplete foreign-national listing for AP, it is pertinent that even use of the larger foreign-national lists of the prior surveys would not materially modify the sharply negative picture.

Newsman Abroad

European Distribution

If the overall drop in correspondents and American correspondents abroad is of concern, so too is the continued maldistribution of that press corps. As was noted in Anderson's first world census, in 1951, and in all studies since, a majority of America's foreign correspondents continue to be posted to Europe.³ Today, 54% of the Americans and 51% of all correspondents are stationed in 19 European countries. Of these, only 7 to 8% are posted in three East European nations, mainly in the U.S.S.R. Of all full-time correspondents in Europe, 69% are American.

Asian Distribution

Elsewhere in the world, notwithstanding a sharp drop (down by 40 correspondents in South Vietnam alone), Asia continues to rank a clear second in importance for American media. Nearly one fourth (23%) of U.S. foreign correspondents may be found on the other side of the international dateline. These 160 journalists include 90 Americans, 56% of the Asian total. About two-thirds of the 160 are in Southeast Asia (overwhelmingly in Hong Kong), nearly one-third in East Asia (nearly all in Japan) and only a handful in the South Pacific (all in Australia).

Western Hemisphere Distribution

The Western Hemisphere is apparently growing in importance to U.S. editors. As in the earlier studies, it ranks third in number of correspondents, with 16% (55 Americans and 51 foreign-nationals), up from 10% in 1972. Of these, some one-third are assigned to Canada. The remaining two-thirds are heavily focused on eight South American countries, with Brazil and Argentina accounting for more than half of the 54 full-timers in the southern continent. The Central American assignments are in Mexico, the Dominican Republic, and Puerto Rico, United Press International's Caribbean springboard. (Incidentally, since Puerto Rico was excluded from the earlier surveys, its inclusion here helps account for the 10% increase of all correspondents in this area over 1972 totals. And the inclusion of this territory also helps minimize the sharp shift toward foreign-national dominance of Western Hemisphere coverage, from 35% in 1972 to 48% today.)

Middle East Distribution

The qualified upgrading of the Western Hemisphere pales in comparison with the growing attention heaped on the Middle East by American editors. Although this region still ranks fourth (with 8% of the U.S. press corps abroad), the overall increase from 1972 is 36%, with the number of American journalists jumping by 50%. Since 1969, the staffing rise is 77% overall and 160% in terms of Americans based full-time in the Middle East.

It is interesting to note that despite recurrent Arab world criticisms regarding American media attention to Israel, 66% of

by Kathleen McLaughlin

Miss McLaughlin, for many years a reporter and foreign correspondent for the New York Times, has been freelancing since her retirement in 1968. She is a former board member and vice president of the OPC.

Now graced with maturity — after 36 years of existence — the Overseas Press Club's annual presentation of news awards has long since qualified as an institution of merit in the world of contemporary communications. At this stage of their authority and prestige, the moment is auspicious to recall that the awards originated in 1940, as an almost spontaneous gesture of commendation for the work of correspondents covering World War II, by their colleagues here at home, members of the newly-born O.P.C. The initial recipient, Leland Stowe of the Chicago Daily News and New York Post, was honored in absentia during press week observance at the New York World's Fair, in August, 1940.

That the O.P.C. awards have since become an international tradition carries its own significance. It is easily attributable to the sustained concern of all those who have served as judges on the successive Awards Committees, to keep the standards of selection at high professional levels. Those standards have been and are, the pride of the Overseas Press Club.

We write War and Peace once a week.

Weekly, TIME correspondents file a volume of words bigger than Tolstoy's War and Peace. And from the 600,000 words that pour into TIME's editors, each week's issue is distilled.

No other newsmagazine starts with so much information. Because, for one thing, no other has anything approaching TIME's reporting staff: 450 correspondents and stringers working out of 30 editorial offices around the world. And no other has the journalistic research facilities, which last year handled 53,000 queries.

There's simply more substance in TIME. More color. More stories you won't find anywhere else. More of the small, human details that bring the news to life. More of the subtle lights and shadings of the real world.

More solidarity, too. Because what you read is just the tip of the iceberg. Underneath is the vast substructure of fact, analysis, personal insight—and experience—that always has set TIME apart from every other newsmagazine.

A busy person really can keep up with every important trend of thought in two hours reading a week.

That's why more people around the world get their news from TIME each week than from any other single news source.

There's only one reason why this disabled vet can't work.

You won't let him.

Unfortunately, there are quite a few businessmen who are a little hesitant about hiring disabled veterans.

Because they're just not sure whether these men can handle a job. And whether they won't demand special privileges once they get one.

Well, we at the National Alliance of Businessmen can assure you that disabled veterans can handle most jobs as well as anyone else, if not better.

And we can assure you, too, that privileges or pity are the last things they'll have on their minds.

Not because we think disabled veterans are mature, experienced, and dedicated individuals.

And not because we think disabled veterans are skilled and trained to handle the kinds of jobs that you can give them.

But because a recent survey by the DuPont Company showed that 91% of the disabled vets they hired rated average or above average in job performance. And because 93% of the disabled vets they hired rated average or above average in job stability.

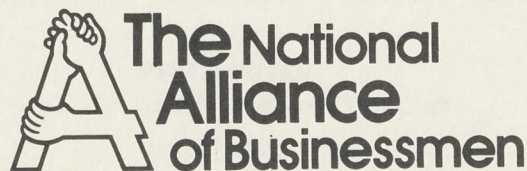

So give a disabled vet a chance, by giving him a job.

A man who's able, mature, and experienced should end up on the payroll.

Not the welfare roll.

The way to get this country working is to get people working. So if you have a job to give, call the National Alliance of Businessmen.

Help America work.

S&H Means Green Stamps

But The Sperry and Hutchinson Company Means:
Carpeting, Furniture, Insurance, Banking, Incentive Programs, Department Stores—and S&H Green Stamps

In 1896, Thomas A. Sperry and Shelly B. Hutchinson started the S&H Green Stamp service. People liked the "extras" stamps brought. They still do. Six out of ten families save them. And S&H Green Stamps are still the biggest part of our business.

But The Sperry and Hutchinson Company today is other things, too. Quality companies such as Bigelow-Sanford, of "title-on-the-door" carpet fame. And Gunlocke, "the chair people." Your publisher probably sits in one—or should. And furniture manufacturers like Daystrom, "the dining room people," Lea, "the bedroom people," and American Drew. You've probably seen American Drew suites. The best homes have them.

Then, too, The Sperry and Hutchinson

Company also means business and consumer services. Bayly, Martin & Fay is one of the biggest commercial insurance brokers. They insure things like the Long Beach, Cal. "Queen Mary," major motion pictures, and some of the nation's best properties. And there's The State National Bank of Connecticut. They hold the country's second oldest bank charter.

And there's Hens & Kelly, a Buffalo, N.Y. department store chain. Do they give S&H Green Stamps? Of course they do.

In 1973, it all came to sales of $615 million. Still, $321 million came from the trading stamp side of the business.

S&H. The Green Stamp people. And a lot more.

NIKON PROFESSIONAL SERVICES

you can't buy them in a store.

NPS is a very special service available only to professional Nikon photographers. While you can't buy admission to NPS, it's offered free to every bona fide Nikon pro. Some of the reasons it's valued so much by Nikon professionals...

PRIORITY REPAIR SERVICE If your Nikon equipment ever needs repair, for any reason, your NPS membership assures you of getting it fixed and returned to you in a hurry because we know how much you depend on it. No extra charge for this priority service.

FREE EQUIPMENT LOANS Available at many of the photographic events attended by Nikon. Just come in, identify yourself, and walk out with that special lens or other piece of equipment that you haven't purchased yet. (Sorry, but you'll have to return it afterwards.)

FREE SUBSCRIPTION TO NIKON WORLD One of today's major photographic magazines, certainly the most important one for any Nikon user. Issue after issue features magnificent full-color portfolios, technical tips, and information about new Nikon products.

NPS NEWSLETTER Keeps you informed of latest developments from Nikon and of what's happening in the field of Nikon photography. Sent free of charge to NPS members only.

Nikon owes its success to its nearly universal acceptance by working professionals. We have always been conscious of the obligation this places upon us and have made it our policy to provide services far beyond what others may consider adequate.

NPS is one more, practical expression of that policy. If you think you qualify for NPS as a working Nikon professional, we invite you to write for information to: Nikon Professional Services, 623 Stewart Avenue, Garden City, New York 11530.

Monsanto. World Citizen.

Where in the world is Monsanto?
Practically anywhere from Anaheim to Zurich, including such far-flung places as Hong Kong, Texas
City, London, New York, Atlanta, Melbourne and Brussels. Multinational Monsanto serves the world's markets with plants and offices in nearly 100 countries.

What on earth is Monsanto doing? Manufacturing and marketing hundreds of products to help meet the needs of the world.
And creating new technology that makes new products possible and existing products better.

Monsanto, the science company, is truly a citizen of the world and in a very real sense, one of its great providers. That's what Monsanto is today . . . and still we're building ahead.
Tomorrow, there'll be new worlds to conquer. We'll be ready.

Monsanto

with world headquarters in St. Louis, Missouri, U.S.A.

When you receive material from Manning, Selvage & Lee, you know it was prepared by a pro.

You know it takes savvy and experience to write an accurate, informative article on top management strategy. That's why we assign professionals to help you. Here, planning a backgrounder on a client's corporate strategy are Molly Fosburgh, Vincent Rennert (standing) and Paul Spindler. Molly, a vice president, is a specialist in the mining and metals industries. Paul is vice president and director of our Los Angeles office; he spent 12 years as a newspaper reporter, editor and publisher before entering corporate public relations. Vince, senior vice president, is a veteran in the world of corporate management. His writing background includes articles, books and factbooks on many of the Fortune 500 firms.

Whether the field is finance or food, banking or baking, textiles or travel, sports or spectroscopy (or any of two dozen other specialized fields), Manning, Selvage & Lee staffs it with professionals. People who know the field. People who know how to write.

Nearly 100 people producing information editors can trust.

DEATH BELOW THE SINK.

This year hundreds of thousands of American youngsters will get into trouble beneath the sink.

Public Health figures estimate that approximately 500,000 children get into accidents involving poisonous substances, each year. Many die.

41% of poisonings occur in the kitchen, and over three quarters happen to youngsters under five years of age. Picture what would happen to you if you took a big swig of cleanser, detergent, disinfectant, bleach, insecticide, drain cleanser, pine oil, paint or solvent, or furniture polish...all products often found beneath the sink.

Then picture what happens to a small child. These little guys can't read labels, and they may think anything in the kitchen is food. And you know how fast they move, when your back is turned.

The answer is to get those under-the-sink chemicals up out of reach.

The same with medicines...even mild ones. Don't harbor killers where your child can get at them.

At Blue Cross and Blue Shield, the health of America is our sole concern.

all correspondents assigned to the Middle East are posted outside Israel (in Lebanon, the United Arab Republic, Iran and Turkey). Indeed, Lebanon, as a base for covering the Arab world, alone has more Americans (16) and more total correspondents (24) than does Israel (15 and 19). And if one is concerned about possible foreign-national bias, the figures again are reassuring, with only 21% of Israel-based correspondents non-American compared to 32% in the four other countries.

African Distribution

Despite its size, some three times that of the United States, Africa continues to get only token coverage from American news media. In all of Africa, full-time correspondents were reported in only four countries: Kenya (with more than half the entire African count), Nigeria, and Ethiopia, all in tropical Africa, and the Republic of South Africa in the lower continent. Outside the Middle East, no full-time correspondents were reported for Arab Africa. Thus, news from Africa suffers not only from being the product of 2% of the full-time press corps (and 3% of the American correspondents), but also from the fact that the limited staffing is maldistributed.

Americans Abroad

If the world regional analysis suggests that the rich in coverage stay rich and the poor poor, another way of ferreting out the impact of the reduction in overseas staff is to analyze the countries of the various world regions for possible loss (or gain) in American presence. The impact is clear. Whereas in 1972 there were 47 countries of the world with one or more American journalists, today's figure drops to 40, down 15%. Again the distribution of the loss is disproportionate, but in this instance the least-covered areas suffered least, perhaps suggesting a tendency by media chiefs to adjust this imbalance somewhat.

Africa, which lost its only American staffer in Uganda, gained one in Ethiopia, and thus holds even at four countries with American newsmen. Asia lost all six Americans distributed among Indonesia, Pakistan and Taiwan, thus dropping from 12 to 9 countries with American staff.

Europe lost three countries with one American each, all in East Europe (Czechoslovakia, Finland, and Poland), to drop from 17 to 14. The Middle East lost two American full-timers in Turkey but gained one in Iran to hold even at four countries. And the Western Hemisphere showed a gain in adding Puerto Rico, but lost Costa Rica and Panama, down one country, in taking its total to nine.

Further, current data show a total of 54 nations assigned one or more full-time journalists, without regard to nationality. Two of the countries with exclusively foreign-national staff bureaus are in the Western Hemisphere, and six each are in Asia and Europe, seemingly more than compensating for the losses indicated above.

But the harsh fact is that in 1972 there were 17 "foreign-national bureaus" augmenting the 47 others, for a total of 64 countries. Looking at all full-time staff, one finds Africa hit hardest, down from 9 countries with U.S.-media representatives to 4, the Middle East surprisingly down from 6 to 5, Europe down from 22 to 19, Asia down from 15 to 14, and only the Western Hemisphere holding even at 15. Apparently, with the sharp staffing losses experienced by American media, almost all areas suffer.

Major Countries Covered Abroad

Yet another way of looking for insights into staffing patterns is to ignore world regions and turn instead to major countries covered. Table 1, which ranks the 10 leading countries in terms of full-time Americans and also shows foreign-national and total figures for the three surveys within the last decade, is revealing.

In addition to the 12% American and 20% total drop in correspondents in these cities between 1969 and 1972, the major change was a pronounced shift from France to England as the prime focus for American media, with minor shifts in the order of the seventh through ninth ranking countries. In both lists, the same six European, three Asian and one Western Hemisphere countries appear.

However, the 1975 list differs considerably from its two predecessors. The number of Americans drops an additional 20% and the overall total an additional 17%. The West European countries all fall off sharply, although their relative rankings remain about the same. South Vietnam understandably disappears from the list, but Asian members Japan and Hong Kong move up to the third and fourth spots. The Middle East appears for the first time with the inclusion of Lebanon and Israel, and Canada replaces Mexico as the sole Western Hemisphere country for the first time.

Most interesting, however, is analysis of the percentage of the available press corps consumed by these top attention-getters. Looking at Americans only over the three surveys, the figures move from 77% in 1969, to 73% in 1972, to only 72% today. The parallel percentages of foreign-nationals fall from 58 to 50 to 50%. And the figures for all full-timers drop from 70 to 65 to 64%. Expressed another way, the top 10 attention-getters fall off 28% in Americans and 34% overall since 1969, as compared to 24% and 27%, respectively, for the world as a whole. Clearly, U.S. media managers do seem to be trying to stretch personnel more evenly across their territories, devoting decreasing proportions of staff to those countries of major interest in an effort to do an adequate job with the rest of the world.

The Distaff Side of the Press Corps

The final aspect of this first analysis of the sixth census data concerns the role occupied by women in the world of foreign correspondence. Perhaps it is a reflection of the times that the current survey was the first to attempt to identify the sex of its subjects, and that information was specifically obtained from all respondents.

Since the appearance of many unfamiliar foreign names, sexually ambiguous names (e.g., Lee) and the use of initials instead of first names abound in the earlier surveys, when gender information was not solicited, no comparisons by sex can be made with earlier surveys. But an interesting picture of the present condition emerges, perhaps one that will serve both as a benchmark for future reference and a target for improvement by those seeking to equalize opportunities for women.

Of 676 total correspondents, about 10 per cent (69) are women. Americans (36) outnumber their foreign-national sisters (33), but these data show only one side of the occupational coin. As a percentage of their total group (13%), foreign-national females are more evident abroad than the female journalists from the United States (8%).

Not surprisingly, the disproportionate geographic allocation evidenced by the overseas press corps as a whole is greatly magnified among the women. Europe, with 51% of the total foreign staff, accounted for 64% of all women and 64% of the Americans. Twenty-two per cent of the women work in the Western Hemisphere, mostly in Canada and Puerto Rico. Only seven women (10%), including three Americans (8%), are stationed in Asia. Three (one American) report from the Middle East. In all of Africa, no full-time women correpon-dents were reported by American media.

Only 10 nations have more than one full-time female correspondent, and only three have more than four: France (16), England (10), and Canada (7).

Just two countries have more than three American women: France, with 9, and England, with 4. Further, only one country in the world, Turkey, has a full-time American press corps consisting exclusively of women and that woman is a foreign national. On the other hand, 32 of the 54 countries in the census appear to be covered solely by men.

Future Analyses

The foregoing analysis of these recent data focuses primarily on the American correspondent abroad, largely in terms of gross distribution patterns and trends. However, the data, once processed for computer analysis, are rich in potential for further study, including inter-media comparisons, country-by-country trends, turnover patterns, and so on.⁴

The real

The news media, both broadcast and print, continue to be the center of controversy. Have they gone too far or aren't they going far enough?

The very heart of a democracy is an open free-flow of information. Without it, our system of government cannot exist. A non-informed electorate is no electorate at all. Without freedom to investigate and report the news from every angle, the members of the press become corporate and government spokesmen. We must keep the channels of communication open to all, even when it hurts.

The ideal

An open society in which information is passed freely back and forth. The more we know, the better off we are.

We're looking...

...for new ways, better products, cleaner processes in a number of areas: chemicals, plastics, ferroalloys, carbon and graphite, atmospheric gases, agricultural products, batteries, antifreeze and car-care products, and much more.

If you're looking for information on any of these, or other information that a multinational company can offer, give us a call.

We've improved our form.

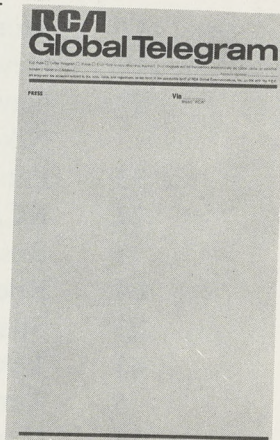

RCA has improved its global communications services. With satellites, cables, computers, and many other things.

We've also made our services easier to use.

One small example is our new Press Telegram form. We've simplified it, so it's faster to fill out. And it gives you more room to file your dispatches.

In speed of service, in ease of service, RCA is the leader in global communications. We're out to keep it that way.

By making the best better.
